IMMEDIATE RELEASE DFW INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT RE-OPENS 1-HOUR
PARKING AS THREAT LEVEL MOVES DOWN TO YELLOW
May 30, 2002

DFW INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, Texas (May 30, 2002) — The Transportation Security Administration has notified DFW Airport that it may re-open its 1,200 one-hour parking places near all four terminals and cease vehicle inspections. The Homeland Security Department has lowered the terrorist threat level from Orange to Yellow, prompting the move.

Airport workers will be removing barricades around the one-hour parking areas today.

Vehicle inspections are also being discontinued, however, vehicles are still subject to search as deemed appropriate by DFW Department of Public Safety. DFW DPS and staff have been visually inspecting nearly 35,000 vehicles per day since Level Orange was declared.

"While the step down to level yellow is good news, DFW continues the high level of security that we provide our passengers and visitors every day," says Alvy Dodson, director of public safety at DFW Airport.
